

Death Penalty Justice Differential

One thing we need to keep in mind in this decision is that we are comparing execution to life imprisonment and not releasing murderers who should be executed back on the street. The choices here relate to comparing the justice of execution to other ways of dealing with the problem of how to deal with people who wrongly take the life of another. The issue is even if death were more justified than life in prison, is the additional justification worth the cost? That is what we need to think about when deciding the merits of this issue.